

Your Backyard

Written by Cynthia Belnap • Illustrated by Jaimee Christensen

There are living things almost everywhere.
You don't have to look too hard.

There are bugs and bees and flowering trees.
You can find them in your backyard.

If you live on a tropical island, a gecko might climb on your wall.

And all of that warm, sunny weather makes palm trees grow very tall.

If you open your door in the city, there are pigeons that nest in the eaves.

And a bush grows along the back stairway,
as a grasshopper chews on the leaves.

If your backyard is close to the marshland,
you can watch the reeds and cattails grow.

Or you may see a frog snapping bugs,
or some ducks flying by very low.

If your backyard is out on the prairie,
the rich soil grows grass, corn, and wheat.

And the prairie dogs run to their burrows
as an owl looks for something to eat.

There are living things almost everywhere.
You don't have to look too hard.
So open your door. Take a peek. Look around.
You will find life in your backyard.
